Barry

This is a surname of local origin from the Barry Islands in Glamorganshire, Wales. In ancient days a very devout man called Baruch was interred there.

Some authorities claim that this name originated from the Welsh as Harry, "the son of Harry, or Henry." There are several small parishes called Barry in different localities in England.

The name of Barry in America has been one of high standing for many generations. For the most part, the members of this family have been centered in the Southern and Middle Western States. The Barrys, of Maryland, were represented by John, who came from Ireland in 1768.

The above coat-of-arms is used by descendants of John Barry.
